Graphi Artist

Andy Warhol's platter-sized poses, Lichtenstein's neon dots, Peter Markey's clouds. Pop Art stars bold prints and bright colors, a combo that's adding pair to spring fashion. Some styles — with huge spots, Twiggyish traps — channel '60s London; others, in bright hues and shapes. Breezy and slight, such slightly psychedelic graphic prints are an antidote to dreariness. ↑ If Keith Haring had dreamt up dresses, they might have looked like this swingy knit number from Future Paradise. ($165, National Jean Company, 7301 Woodmont Ave., Bethesda; 301-907-0295)

↓ Fruit coup? Repeating patterns decorate Pop canvases and "Paaryna" print bags from Marimekko. The Finnish line revived the 1969 pear fabric for spring 2007. ($109 and $64, marimekkowashington.com)

↑ Be a Factory It Girl—or just the hottest chick at your next gallery opening—in Diane von Furstenberg's stretchy silk bubble dress ($425, shopbop.com) and RSVP's patent peep toes ($70, zappos.com).

↓ Peter Markey's many things, but, for under $100, Jabin wedges with a wavy pattern.
